The Scleroderma Foundation's Mission: Support, Education, Research

Support. The Foundation helps patients and their families cope with scleroderma through various support programs, peer counseling, physician referrals, and educational information offered by our U.S. network of chapters and support groups.

Education. We promote public awareness and education through patient and health professional seminars, scleroderma-related literature, and publicity campaigns. A toll-free information line is offered in addition to patient education information and a comprehensive website containing medical articles, research, and support information.

Research. The Foundation aims to stimulate and support research to improve treatment and ultimately find the cause of and cure for scleroderma. As the leading nonprofit supporter of scleroderma research, our peer-review based program annually funds approximately $1 million in scleroderma-related research.

Membership: For only US$35 a year, you can become a member, support our mission, and receive our quarterly magazine, Scleroderma Voice, packed with:

- Updates on the latest scleroderma research and treatments
- Articles by leading doctors and other health professionals
- Answers to your medical questions by health professionals
- Practical tips on coping with scleroderma
- Heartwarming stories by and about people with scleroderma, describing how they have met and overcome their challenges
- Articles about what the Scleroderma Foundation is doing for you—such as funding new research, advocating for more federal research funding on Capitol Hill, and working nationwide, year-round to raise public awareness of scleroderma and its impact on individuals and their families
